

Portfolio Allocation Drift: Is It Time to Rebalance Small Cap Exposure?

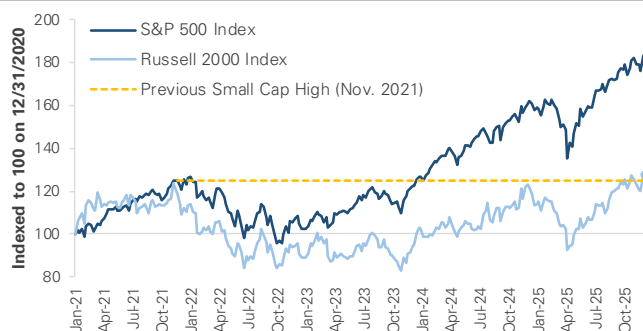

The S&P 500 has delivered strong returns the past two years, setting 57 all-time highs in 2024 and adding more than 35 in 2025. Large-cap stocks have benefited from a combination of AI enthusiasm, resilient earnings, and strong economic growth. However, one corner of the market has been noticeably absent: small-cap stocks. While the S&P 500 climbed to new highs, Figure 1 shows the Russell 2000, an index of small-cap stocks, remained stuck below its November 2021 peak. The four-year drought ended this fall when small caps broke through to new highs, driven by expectations for additional Federal Reserve rate cuts.

Small-cap stocks are more sensitive to interest rates than their large-cap counterparts. Many smaller companies carry higher debt loads relative to their size and rely more heavily on borrowing to fund growth. When interest rates rise, financing costs squeeze profit margins. Conversely, when interest rates fall, the pressure eases as borrowing becomes cheaper. Small's recent underperformance began when the Federal Reserve started its rate-hiking cycle in 2022, but it started to reverse this year in Q3. Expectations for additional rate cuts have breathed new life into small caps. Small-cap stocks gained +12% in Q3 compared to +7.8% for large caps, the largest relative outperformance since Q1 2021. The outperformance has continued into Q4, with small caps outperforming large caps by +1.0% quarter-to-date.

Beyond the Fed's actions, valuations and investor flows tell a compelling story. Small-cap stocks trade at a significant discount to large caps, with the valuation gap at extremes. Figure 2 shows small-cap ETFs have posted net outflows this year, shedding roughly $12.5 billion through October 2025. It's the first year of net outflows since 2011. The message is clear: small-cap stocks haven't just underperformed; they've been actively avoided. Investors poured money into large-cap tech and AI-related names while small caps were left behind. The combination of depressed valuations and persistent outflows suggests these stocks are not just undervalued but genuinely unloved and under owned. This creates a potential opportunity for long-term investors.

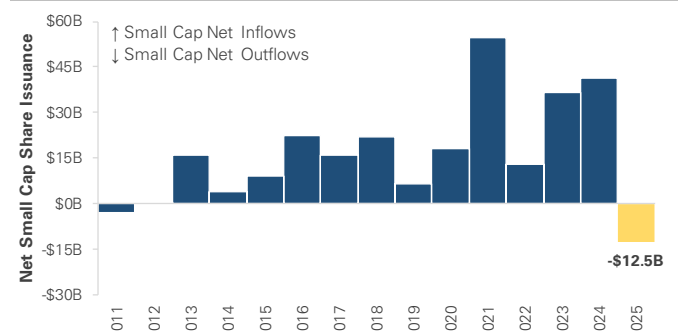

What does this mean for your portfolio? If you've benefited from the S&P 500's record run, the small-cap breakout raises a strategic question: Is it time to rebalance? The goal isn't to time the market but to evaluate whether your portfolio has drifted too far toward large caps and whether adding exposure to small caps aligns with your long-term goals. Small caps bring diversification at a time when the S&P 500 is highly concentrated in a few mega-cap tech names. Small caps are more domestically focused, spread across a wider range of industries, and less dependent on the AI narrative. While they are more volatile than large caps, the investment case appears to be strengthening. Fed rate cuts favor smaller borrowers, small caps trade at a steep valuation discount, and investor positioning is light. The recent breakout to new highs could mark a turning point. For those with a long-term horizon, small caps might deserve consideration in 2026.

Figure 1 – Small Cap Stocks Surpass Previous 2021 Highs

Disclosures: S&P Global, Russell. Past performance is no guarantee of future results. Time Period: January 2021 to December 2025. Latest available data as of 12/8/2025.

Figure 2 – Small Cap ETFs Experience Outflows in 2025

Disclosures: ICI. Data represents the net value of shares issued each calendar year. Time Period: January 2011 to October 2025. Latest available data as of 12/8/2025.

Important Disclosures

PUREfi Wealth, LLC ("PUREfi") is a registered investment adviser with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Any reference to the terms "registered investment adviser" or "registered" does not imply that PUREfi or any person associated with PUREfi has achieved a certain level of skill or training. A copy of PUREfi's current written disclosure statement discussing our advisory services and fees is available for your review upon request.

The information provided is for informational purposes only and advisers should determine for themselves whether a particular service or product is suitable for their clients' investment needs.

The information contained herein should not be construed as an attempt to sell or solicit any products or services of PUREfi or any investment strategy, nor should it be construed as legal, accounting, tax or other professional advice. This material is proprietary and may not be reproduced, transferred, modified or distributed in any form without prior written permission from PUREfi. PUREfi reserves the right, at any time and without notice, to amend, or cease publication of the information contained herein.

Certain information contained herein has been obtained from third-party sources and has not been independently verified. It is made available on an "as is" basis without warranty. Any strategies or investment programs described in this presentation are provided for educational purposes only and are not necessarily indicative of securities offered for sale or private placement offerings available to any investor. The views expressed in the referenced materials are subject to change based on market and other conditions. This document contains certain statements that may be deemed forward-looking statements. Please note that any such statements are not guarantees of any future performance; actual results or developments may differ materially from those projected. Any projections, market outlooks, or estimates are based upon certain assumptions and should not be construed as indicative of actual events that will occur.

Historical performance results for investment indices and/or product benchmarks have been provided for general comparison purposes only, and do not include the charges that might be incurred in an actual portfolio, such as transaction and/or custodial charges, investment management fees, or the impact of taxes, the incurrence of which would have the effect of decreasing historical performance results.